California's Bay Bridge closed indefinitely after more structural damage

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO The San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge, closed after 5,000 pounds of metal broke off during rush hour earlier this week, won't reopen to traffic in time for Thursday morning's commute, a California Department of Transportation spokesman said Wednesday.

The bridge, one of the region's major transportation arteries, has been out of commission since Tuesday evening, when metal rods and a cable fell into traffic, leaving one motorist with minor injuries.

The accident resurrected fears about the safety of a span that millions watching the 1989 World Series broadcast saw had failed during a major earthquake.

Tuesday's terrifying scene stirred anger over the constant delays and soaring costs of the still-unfinished new eastern span of the Bay Bridge, which has become the largest public works project in California history.

"I thought I was going into the Bay," said Andrea Nelson, a marketing consultant and personal coach who saw the crossbar and two rods fall and bounce on the road ahead of her as she headed into San Francisco for dinner. She swerved and her car spun out as she ran over the rods, which gashed her tires.

Construction crews worked through Tuesday night fighting winds

WHAT CAUSED THE ACCIDENT?

Caltrans spokesman Bart Ney said earlier Wednesday the strong winds likely played a role in the failure, which heightened concerns by some experts about the integrity of the repair and the bridge's safety in an earthquake. Scientists in 2008 said there is a 63 percent chance of a quake similar to the 6.9-magnitude Loma Prieta tremor striking the Bay area in the next 30 years.

that gusted to 35 mph as they brought in heavy machinery to try to move the metal and make repairs. On Wednesday, the strong winds continued to hamper efforts to repair the bridge that carries about 280,000 cars each day.

California Department of Transportation spokesman Bart Ney told reporters Wednesday evening he didn't know when traffic would again be allowed on the bridge.

The pieces that failed were parts of major repairs done last month after state inspectors discovered a crack in an "eyebar," an important structural beam. The rods that broke were holding a saddle-like cap that had been installed to strengthen the cracked eyebar.

Caltrans engineers were trying to figure out why the recent repairs—which were supposed to last until the new bridge opened in 2013—failed in less than two months.

Up to 18 inches of snow was forecast in Denver and along the northern Colorado Front Range. As much as 4 feet was possible in the Colorado mountains. Cheyenne was expected to get at least 14 inches before the storm moves off Thursday afternoon.

Circus outing? Send in the clowns!

Both sides of the family are coming in for Thanksgiving this year. Someone suggested an outing to the circus at the United Center that weekend. Now, doesn't that sound like a barrel of fun?

You can't refuse, Mark, you can't opt out, it's fun for the whole family. And your son, think of him. He's never been so excited.

OK, Gina, honey, I'm in. Sure, I'll buy the tickets. Send in the Bazers!

We'll get 14 tickets, heck, we'll buy a whole row—and, keeping in the spirit of the thing, we'll take one car!

But, hold on, what about Grandma? She can't climb those stairs. She oughtn't go, and, hmm, maybe, Gina should stay home, too, keep her company. That's fine—more circus fun for the rest of us.

Although, what about my sister? She'll be nine months pregnant—you want the contortionist to deliver the baby?

Good point. She's out. So is her husband; he'll need to get the suitcase for the hospital ready. And nix their kid. He's only 1 and tends to do what they do.

But otherwise we're still going, right? Of course. My son won't stop talking about it. "I feel like I was born to go to the circus," he keeps saying.

Wait, when are we going again? Saturday morning. Why do you ask? Oh, right. Gina's dad can't make it. He'll be at synagogue—but he promises to pray for the mistreated animals, and the souls of their trainers.

Phew. That relieves the rest of us—and, still, it'll be quite a group!—of any circus-going guilt. Should I book the tickets?

Definitely. But, hey, don't get one for Gina's mom. She's staying home with Gina and her grandmother. Help bridge the generation gap, you know?

Also, one of the Ringling brothers is out as well.

Gotcha. And what about my mom? Official word is: Out. She'll need to help her pregnant daughter—maybe buy diapers in case the stores are all out of them when the baby's born.

OK, this is more manageable anyway. Let me e-mail Gina's cousins and confirm that ... they're out too. They're from the old Soviet Union, and it seems they left precisely so they had the freedom not to do things they don't want to do—going to the circus topping the list.

That still leaves three of us. Er, make that two. My dad's canceled. Won't give a specific reason—but keeps mumbling something about having worked hard and supported his family and is now retired.

OK, son, let's go. But if you ask one more time if you'll get a toy there, you're going in the cannon.

OBAMA TODAY

NEW DOCUMENTARY FOLLOWS PRESIDENT ON ROAD FROM CAMPAIGN TO WHITE HOUSE

By Alexia Elejalde-Ruiz

REDEYE

Early on in "By the People," a behind-the-scenes documentary chronicling Barack Obama's presidential campaign, viewers meet Ronnie Cho, a field organizer making calls from a cubicle in an Iowa campaign office.

The office is almost empty, reflecting a time, at the start of the Democratic primary, when many had never heard Obama's name.

"It's surreal to think that at one point I had to beg and plead for people to come to a house party in Iowa to meet him," Cho said. "That actually took real convincing."

Fast forward to Election Day, when Obama loomed large as a beacon of hope for a newly enchanted generation. As the ballots rolled in and Grant Park crackled with an electric euphoria, Cho called his mother, crumpled into a chair and wept uncontrollably.

"By the People," which screens Friday at Chicago's Cadillac Theater before premiering Tuesday on HBO, captures Obama's meteoric rise to the presidency through the previously unseen vantage point of the campaign staffers whose sweat and tears helped get him there.

But a year after Obama's historic election, the mood has sobered.

Political partisanship remains the rule in Washington, and some of Obama's greatest supporters complain that promises of change remain unfulfilled. Amid fights about health care reform and an unemployment rate pushing to 10 percent, Obama's job approval rating slid nine points between the second and third quarters of the year, to 53 percent in October—one of the biggest quarter drops in the first year of an elected president, according to Gallup, and a steady decline from the 68 percent approval he enjoyed just after the inauguration.

For filmmaker Alicia Sams, the documentary is coming at the right time.

"What I hope happens is that people see it and remember how engaged they were," said Sams, 45, who lives in Oak Park. "It's not enough to grumble. You have to speak up."

Sams and her collaborator, 33-year-old Amy Rice of New York, both independent filmmakers, started following Obama nine months before he declared his run for president. They had unique access to Obama, his family and key campaign staffers as they celebrated the thrill of their first victory in Iowa and slogged through the draining battles that followed. Among the intimate moments captured are Michelle Obama at home playing with the kids, her husband blanking as he prepares for a debate, chief strategist David Axelrod confessing primary angst at Chicago's Manny's Deli, and young speech writer Jon Favreau tweaking the iconic words Obama would later deliver to thousands of supporters.

Actor Ed Norton, whose company produced the film, said the premise was that Obama's candidacy would be "a prism through which the country would reveal itself," with the film ultimately trying to answer the question: Is America ready to elect a black president?

It turned out it was. But a year later, is America happy with how he's doing?

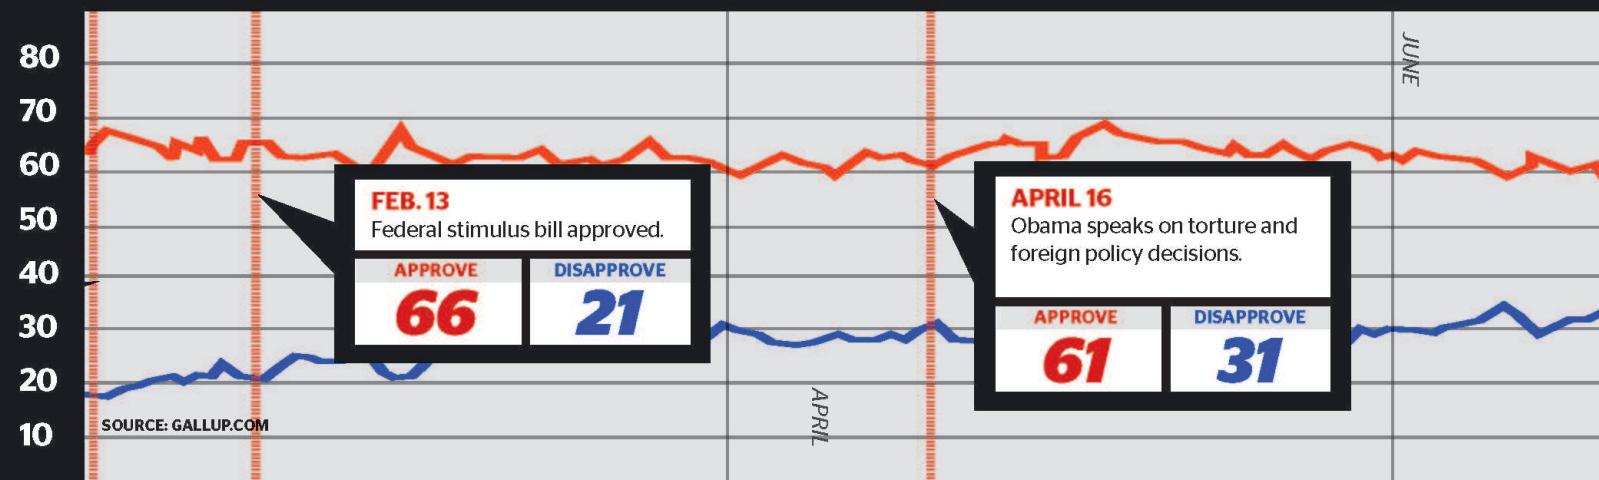

"The campaign was so full of energy, and then all of a sudden, it's like watching paint dry," said

Davie Decoursey-James, an Obama supporter who lives in Bronzeville. Decoursey-James, 45, said he'll wait to assess until halfway into the presidency.

"I won't allow myself to be disappointed because I just don't think there's been enough time yet," he said.

Hyde Park resident Joseph Dozier, 22, thinks there's plenty to be disappointed about already, including failure to act on gay rights and privacy rights.

Dozier, president of the University Republicans at the University of Chicago, voted for Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) in the election, but said he was "very happy" about Obama's victory and hoped he'd live up to his campaign rhetoric. Instead, Dozier said, "the Obama administration has tried to bite off too much, too soon," and its policies don't look much different from that of former President George W. Bush.

For many Obama supporters, the high may have subsided, but the hope has not.

"I still am a strong believer that he is going to do the right thing," said Lupe Jimenez, 27, of Clearing. "I think it's just going to take some time for us to get there."

Nikki Snodgrass, 28, who was in the ecstatic crowd at Grant Park on election night, said that while Obama's promised changes are "kind of slow-going," that's to be expected given the obstacles on his plate and the nature of governing.

Still, she said, Obama hasn't lived up to all her expectations. Her biggest letdown was when Obama said he wanted to "move forward" rather than demand accountability in response to the memos he released detailing CIA torture.

"That really bothered me," said Snodgrass, who lives in Lincoln Square. "He always seemed to be such a humanitarian."

Some people revved up during the campaign have lost interest.

Adam Wolf of Uptown said Obama's campaign got him more involved than he'd ever been before—but now that it's no longer in his face, Wolf, 26, said he's been paying less attention, as his life is busy enough holding down four jobs.

One of those jobs is as founder of Waggish Apparel, maker of funny T-shirts for dogs and their owners, which in its own way reflects the dampened passion about Obama. As press about Obama turned negative, Wolf said, he avoided featuring the "Bark Obama" and "All Barack, No Bite" T-shirts at marketing events.

The drop in popularity hasn't discouraged Cho, the campaign field organizer, who said he still feels Obama can unite the country in ways no other politician has or could.

"We've been here before, we've been the underdog," said Cho, now 26 and working as associate director of legislative affairs at the Department of Homeland Security. "I don't feel any less confident than I did a year ago."

BY THE PEOPLE (NR)

Did you know that Barack Obama is a charismatic guy? And that a lot of people like and support him?

You can learn all of this and more in "By the People," an affectionate documentary about Obama's historic campaign that teaches, well, not much of anything. The film does offer excellent access to the big man based on the South Side, spending a lot of time with him along the campaign trail. It just provides no insight about the struggles he faced or the reasons so many people were excited by Obama and volunteered to help.

The message is merely that people wanted to see him take the lead because, you know, he's a born leader. (There is, however, a funny scene of a 9-year-old volunteer doing a pretty impressive job on a cold-call, with his professional demeanor fully contradicted by funny, frustrated facial expressions.) As you might expect, the Obamas come off as a very likable, laid-back, relatable family, but any strain felt from the election process is mostly glossed over.

It's disappointing to get only a surface-level look at a monumental election, but the movie does at least provide this hilarious nugget from Chris Matthews, responding to Obama's win in the very, very preliminary Iowa caucus: "For [Hillary] Clinton, what was once considered inevitable now seems barely likely."

How quickly the political tide turns.

Tests shed light on Chris Kelly death

Chicago Tribune

Political fundraiser Christopher Kelly, who apparently committed suicide last month after pleading guilty in a federal fraud case, ingested a combination of a pain reliever and rat poison, according to the mayor of Country Club Hills, where Kelly's body was found.

Mayor Dwight Welch said he is planning a news conference within the next 24 hours to announce the toxicology report on Kelly.

Kelly apparently ingested the substances in a rented trailer in Country Club Hills as he was faced with personal turmoil and mounting federal pressure to cooperate in the sweeping corruption case against former Gov. Rod Blagojevich. Kelly was a top fundraiser and adviser to Blagojevich.

Days after Kelly's death, Country Club Hills police said they had determined it was an apparent suicide, pending results of the toxicology tests.

Police said they had reviewed evidence, examined surveillance tapes and interviewed witnesses, including Kelly's girlfriend and two of Kelly's other friends, one of whom had taken some items from the trailer.

On Sept. 11, he went to a rented trailer used by his roofing company, police said. He had earlier purchased items at a nearby Wal-Mart and, according to a source with specific knowledge of the investigation, it was inside the trailer where he ingested numerous pills.

Police later found a sleeping bag on the trailer's floor surrounded by pictures of Kelly's three daughters and an unopened box of rat poison. Police said they also recovered empty bottles of Aleve and Tylenol.

Kelly, 51, had been a close Blagojevich friend and adviser who had been indicted three times on tax, kickback and fraud charges. He also was estranged from his wife and faced serious financial problems, partly due to gambling debts.

DAY IN COURT

ATTORNEY SAYS TERROR SUSPECT COULD HAVE BEEN DUPED

Associated Press

Prosecutors urged a federal judge Wednesday to deny bond to one of two Chicago men charged with plotting a terrorist attack against a Danish newspaper, while the man's lawyer argued that his client could have been the innocent dupe of an alleged coconspirator.

Tahawwur Hussain Rana, 48, was a danger to the community and a flight risk and therefore should not be released on bond, Assistant U.S. Attorney Daniel Collins told federal Magistrate Judge Nan Nolan.

The husky, full-bearded Rana appeared at the hearing wearing the bright orange jumpsuit of a federal prisoner but did not say anything to the judge.

Hours before the hearing, prosecutors amended the complaint against Rana, adding a charge of providing material support to terrorism. He already had been charged with conspiring to provide material support to terrorism.

The new charge did not add major factual allegations against Rana.

The complaint says Rana—a Canadian national who was born in Pakistan and owns a grocery store and immigration service in Chicago—provided travel services and other help to another man charged in the case, David Coleman Headley, as Headley scouted out the offices of Denmark's Jyllands-Posten newspaper for a possible terrorist attack.

The newspaper published 12h cartoons depicting the Prophet Muhammad in 2005 that triggered outrage throughout the Muslim world.

The cartoonist, 74-year-old Kurt Westergaard, said in an interview Tuesday with Jyllands-Posten that threats from the Islamic world drove him underground, living under the protection of the Danish intelligence service.

Rana's attorney, Patrick Blegen, told Nolan the evidence in an FBI affidavit outlining allegations against his client could easily support the notion that he was merely an innocent dupe of Headley and knew nothing about any plan to attack the Danish newspaper.

"The weight of the evidence here is not

ONGOING

The judge said she needed more information and set another hearing in the case for Tuesday, although she said she wouldn't decide the matter then either.

as much as the government has told you," Blegen said in urging Nolan to free his client on bond.

Prosecutors say Headley, whose former name was Daood Gilani, envisioned a plan to murder the cartoonist and the newspaper's former cultural editor.

Rana will remain at the Metropolitan Correctional Center. Blegen said Rana suffers from an old shoulder injury that makes it hard for him to press a button that works the water faucet in his cell, and that Rana needs to see a doctor.

Blegen said two of Rana's brothers in New Jersey were willing to post their homes as bond and relatives in Canada would post "what amounts to their life savings" to get him out of federal custody pending resolution of the case.

Daley takes on homelessness

Chicago Tribune

Mayor Daley on Wednesday highlighted his proposal to spend an extra $1.4 million next year on programs aimed at ending homelessness by pointing out a recent spike in the number of people at Chicago shelters.

Daley said a city count done in January showed the city's homeless population had dropped 10 percent to 5,170 in the past two years. But the mayor said that number appears to have grown since then.

"The effect of the national economic recession can clearly be seen on the street [and in] foreclosed homes," Daley said.

In Daley's new budget, which aldermen are now debating at hearings, $1.4 million from parking meter lease proceeds would be dedicated to programs that are part of the city's Program to End Homelessness.

Half of that new money would increase capacity at homeless shelters and their support services. The other half would be spent on the more than 1,000 homeless people or those at risk of becoming homeless with various support services.

Nancy Radner, chief executive officer of the Chicago Alliance to End Homelessness, said programs aimed at getting the homeless off the streets and into some sort of housing had been successful. Since 2003, when the city's plan was launched, the number of homeless on the streets has dropped by 38 percent, she said.

A person was hit and killed by a CTA Blue Line train Wednesday afternoon at the Monroe Street subway station in the Loop, authorities said. She added that shuttle buses were operating in both directions between the Grand and Racine stations.

150 years in student's murder

A Chicago man was sentenced to 150 years in prison Wednesday for killing a 14-year-old high school honor student in 2006 as he tried to shoot two other men. Carail Weeks, 28, was convicted last month of the slaying of Starkesia Reed and the attempted murders of two drug dealers who were the intended targets. Reed was at her Englewood home preparing for school when a bullet crashed through a front window and struck her in the head.

Seniors' free rides scaled back?

Lawmakers are thinking about scaling back free bus and train rides for all but the poorest seniors to help cash-strapped transit agencies, a move that carries the risk of alienating a large group of voters. That's why the plan rolled out Wednesday by legislative leaders and transit officials to curtail free rides faces an uncertain future in the two days left in the fall session. Under the legislation, seniors would qualify for free rides only if they met income requirements set by the state's Circuit Breaker program. TRIBUNE

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

Grand Boulevard, which includes part of Bronzeville, saw three homicides this week.

An 18-year-old man was shot to death in the 4200 block of South Prairie Avenue on Tuesday, according to preliminary police information.

On Sunday, a 44-year-old man was shot to death in the 4900 block of South Langley Avenue while a 25-year-old man was stabbed to death near 50th Street and South St. Lawrence Avenue, police said.

Grand Boulevard this year has seen nine homicides, according to a RedEye analysis of preliminary police data, and eight of the slayings occurred in the last five months.

Citywide, there have been 33 homicides recorded so far this month, including a fatal car crash that killed two people in West Englewood. Chicago police recorded 46 murders in October 2008. TSWARTZ@TRIBUNE.COM

Proper Halloween

5 Britain's authority on etiquette, Debrett's, issued its first guidance Wednesday on how to behave during Halloween. It has only been recently that British stores have swelled with Halloween stock and trick-or-treaters have canvassed streets for candy.

THE DIGIT

3.6%

The number of buyers snapping up new homes dipped unexpectedly last month as the effects of a temporary tax credit for first-time owners started to wear off. The 3.6 percent drop in September's new home sales, reported by the Commerce Department on Wednesday, was the first decline since March and a distinct sign of weakness in a market that had rebounded strongly over the summer.

Car bomb kills more than 100

6 PESHAWAR, Pakistan A car bomb struck a busy market in northwestern Pakistan on Wednesday, killing 100 people—mostly women and children—as visiting Secretary of State Hillary Clinton pledged U.S. support for Islamabad's campaign against Islamic militants.

More than 200 people were wounded in the blast in the main northwestern city of Peshawar, the deadliest in a surge of attacks by suspected insurgents this month. The government blamed militants seeking to avenge an army offensive launched this month against al-Qaida and Taliban in their stronghold close to the Afghan border.

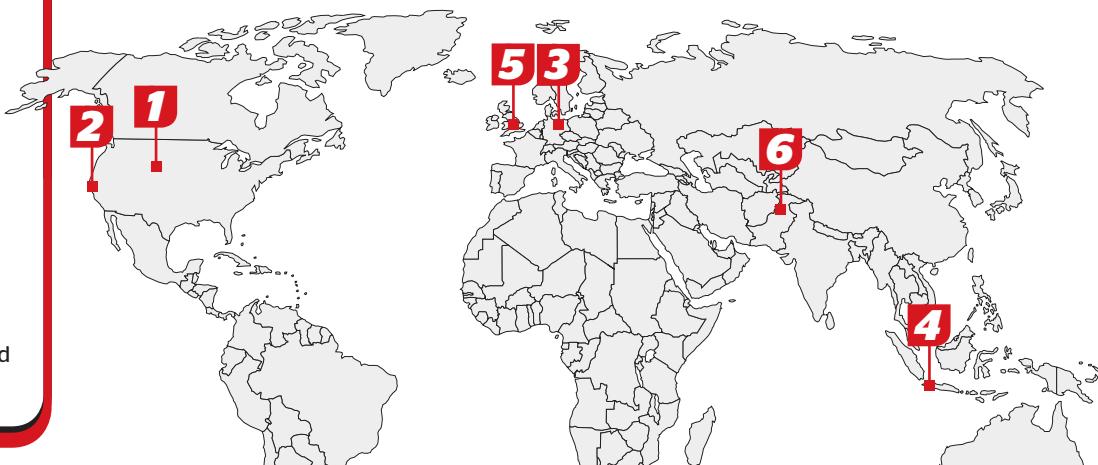

The bombing was the deadliest since explosions hit homecoming festivities for former Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto in Karachi in October 2007, killing about 150 people. Bhutto was later slain in a separate attack.

Wednesday's bomb destroyed much of the Mina Bazaar in Peshawar's old town, a warren of narrow alleys clogged with stalls and shops selling dresses, toys and cheap jewelry that drew many female shoppers and children in the conservative city.

The blast collapsed buildings, including a mosque, and set scores of shops ablaze. The wounded sat amid burning debris and parts of bodies as a huge plume of gray smoke rose above the city.

Crying for help, men tried to pull survivors from beneath wreckage. One man carried away a baby with a bloody face and a group of men rescued a young boy covered in dust, but others found only bodies of the dead. A two-story building collapsed as firefighters doused it with water, triggering more panic.

BULLS GUT CHECK LIST

TO IMPROVE ON LAST YEAR'S PLAYOFF SEASON, CHICAGO HAS SPECIFIC GOALS TO MEET, HOLES TO AVOID

Chicago Tribune

Close to six months ago, the Bulls trudged off the Celtics' famed parquet floor, losers in a Game 7 that closed one of the most epic playoff series in NBA history.

Since that May 2 game, the Bulls have lost Ben Gordon to free agency, drafted forwards James Johnson and Taj Gibson and promised to build on the promise they showed during that series.

Their chance begins Thursday night at the United Center against the Spurs. One night later, the Bulls travel to, ahem, Boston.

This time, Kevin Garnett won't be injured. "He'll be pretty excited," Joakim Noah said, smiling. "But we will be too."

There are three things that need to happen for the Bulls to beat last season's 41-41 mark—and three things they must avoid.

THE BULLS MUST AVOID ...
Injuries

The Bulls are deeper this season and actually weathered last season's injuries fairly well. But with a brutal early schedule that features 10 of the first 15 games on the road, a lack of cohesion caused from massive preseason injuries could play a role. "It's a concern," guard Kirk Hinrich said.

A subpar Luol Deng

The good news about Deng's first preseason since missing last season's final 29 games is that he didn't miss a practice or game. The bad news is he did miss shots, finishing at just 38 percent. "I'm not worried about it," Deng said. "I feel very confident going into this season."

Coaching stumbles

Coach Vinny Del Negro has raised this issue himself, agreeing all coaches need to improve each season. "I did some good things last season, and there are areas in which I need to improve," he said. Del Negro rode a very tight rotation down the stretch last season and how the second-year coach handles having more depth, as well as late-game situations, will be scrutinized closely.

Derrick Rose to start Thursday

On Thursday, Derrick Rose finally will take the court for the first time since injuring the posterior tibialis tendon in his right ankle Oct. 2 in Indiana.

"I can't wait," Rose said. "I'm about 80 percent. Hopefully by the end of the month, I should be back to my regular self. My explosiveness isn't all the way there."

Tony Parker's is. Rose knows what that means for his defensive assignment against the Spurs.

"His game is running, and I'm going to have to chase him around," Rose said. "He's a very quick and smart player."

Coach Vinny Del Negro said Rose's minutes would be determined by how his ankle and defensive prowess against Parker are faring.

Rose, John Salmons, Luol Deng, Tyrus Thomas and Joakim Noah worked as the first unit in Wednesday's final practice.

Del Negro wouldn't reveal his starters officially — other than Rose — but did say Brad Miller, Taj Gibson and Kirk Hinrich definitely would play off the bench. Whether the rotation expands beyond eight players to include the other rookie, James Johnson, remains to be seen.

"If we stay healthy, minutes will be scarce," Del Negro said. "Rookies tend to make more mistakes than others. James the last few days has done a better job defensively. He's understanding things better, so that's positive." TRIBUNE

THE BULLS MUST ...

D it up

The mantra has been chanted since last season ended—“Defense will be our focus.” It is encouraging—even if it’s preseason—the Bulls led the league in allowing just 40.3 percent shooting.

“We’re better defensively,” Del Negro said. “The trust factor takes time to build. The communication and rotations have gotten sharper. Now it’s a matter of putting that in games that matter and trusting your teammates.”

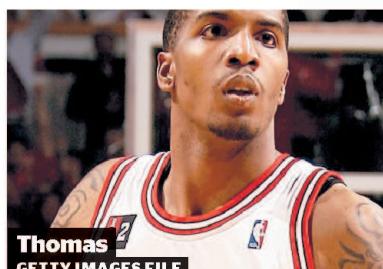

Added Noah: “We understand our rotations better. Guys are more committed to it.”

Find a clutch player:

Gordon is gone. Derrick Rose is ascending. And John Salmons’ cool and calm demeanor lends itself perfectly to crunch time.

Even Rose admits he didn’t produce often enough in clutch moments last season but sounds eager to assume that responsibility.

“I love to have the ball in my hands then,” Rose said.

Thomas
GETTY IMAGES FILE

Get consistency from Noah and Tyrus Thomas:

Noah has bulked up, turned completely serious and continued to exhibit the ability to pass, rebound and run the floor that attracted the Bulls to him in the first place.

The question, of course, is whether he can do so for an entire 82-game season.

“Playing in the playoffs gave me a taste,” Noah said. “I loved how much more competitive it is than the regular season and how you have to focus in all 48 minutes.”

Tyrus Thomas played well in the preseason when not injured or coming off the bench for Gibson, a move the fourth-year forward didn’t like. If he can channel aggression and athleticism into focus and consistency, the Bulls should thrive.

A-list matchups

Happy Association Day, Chicago! We’re jumping head-first into Bulls basketball with an off-season’s worth of expectations firmly in hand. To give you an idea of what to expect this season, here are the Top Ten Bulls Games to Watch in 2009-10.

At Memphis March 16

10 D. Rose and the Bulls might need some help to pass this test. Led by O.J. Mayo, the Grizzlies aren’t the guaranteed “W” they once were.

At Milwaukee Nov. 30

9 By this, the last game of the dreaded circus trip, we should have a pretty good idea of what we have in My Coach Vinny and Co.

Vs. L.A. Clippers Feb. 2

8 Scoring 100 against the Clippers is as easy as dropping 45 on the Bears. Which means free tacos for everyone!

Vs. Utah March 9

7 Fighting Illini product Deron Williams returns to the city that worships him as if he were one of their own.

Vs. L.A. Lakers Dec. 15

6 Phil Jackson’s off-Broadway production of the Bulls Dynasty comes to town! Kobe Bryant stars as Jordan, Lamar Odom as Pippen and Ron Artest as Rodman.

Vs. Detroit Dec. 2

5 In his return to the UC, Ben Gordon’s gonna be firing shots faster than Tommie Harris can come up with an excuse for missing practice.

Vs. San Antonio Thursday

4 Make sure you slam some coffee beforehand because Tim Duncan and Co.’s game could put an insomniac to sleep.

At New Orleans Jan. 29

3 If you want to be the best, you’ve got to beat the best. Rose vs. Chris Paul is about as good as it gets.

At Boston Friday

2 Adding Rasheed Wallace to a team that already acted like a bunch of pompous prima-donnas cements the C’s status as Chicago’s most-hated NBA rival.

At Cleveland Nov. 5

1 I’m thinking LeBron James and Shaq make a better WWE Tag Team than anything. Though Shaq in spandex would have to come with a warning label.

1 What are going to keep a close eye on during the Bulls opener Thursday night?	"The Office" and "30 Rock."	Making sure Joakim Noah's head doesn't get snared by passing fur trappers.	The Incredibulls! Benny! The Dunkin Donuts race! They're all awesome!	My calendar. After Thursday just 81 more games till the 2010 free agent frenzy!	The infamous ankle of Derrick Rose.
2 Which Bulls player will surprise people this season?	Derrick Rose. He'll follow in the glorious footsteps of Geovany Soto and Matt Forte.	That guy whose last name is a fish ... Bobby Tilapia?	Aaron Gray. Guy's awesome!	One of those guys that isn't Derrick Rose.	I'm gonna go with this John Salmons guy. Now, please don't ask me why.
3 Make a crazy prediction for Game 2 of the World Series.	In the bottom of the ninth, with the game on the line, an umpire will get a call right.	The only man who'll reach second base will be Steve Phillips.	It might be cold. Crazy!	Pedro Martinez dives into the Legends Suite to fight Don Zimmer. Again.	Players will be so tired from Game 1, then watching "Next Top Model" on Channel 9 that the game will be postponed.
4 What have you heard/not heard from the Bears this week that worries you?	I've tuned them out this week. So I'm not worried. Just still sick to my stomach.	Not encouraged to hear the D-Line being referred to as "Swiss cheese."	Have they replaced everyone yet? No? That worries me.	Lovie's passionate postgame reaction Sunday: "It happens."	Not worried. I think they know they sucked so bad last week it won't happen again—at least this soon!
5 Chris Chelios made his debut with the Wolves. What did you expect out of him?	Since when did the Wolves switch to playing wheelchair hockey?	Lovely to see the Rascal Mobility Scooter League up and running.	Lotta wheezing.	An A-list crowd. Cusack, Vedder, famous Greek people.	Really people, really? You know I know nothing about hockey.

Sports scares

In the spirit of Halloween, the Tribune asked four Chicago athletes some scary questions.

Who is your scariest teammate?

Joakim Noah: Jerome James. Not because of how big he is and all that. But because the other day he came in and put a song on by Soulja Boy called "LOL Smiley Face." And it's like for 12-year-olds. And for me, that was pretty scary.

Desmond Clark: Olin Kreutz.

Nick Roach: I wouldn't mess with Rashied Davis because he's from L.A.

Patrick Kane: Dustin Byfuglien. He's 250 pounds and just looks like a mean guy. But he's actually one of the nicest kids on the team.

Scariest movie?

Noah: I stay away from those all the time. Why would I want to be scared?

Clark: I don't watch scary movies [now], but I used to watch "Friday the 13th" back then.

Roach: "Texas Chainsaw Massacre," the first remake.

Kane: I like the "Saw" movies.

Worst costume you ever wore?

Noah: That's a close call between a Dracula once and the time I dressed up as a pumpkin.

Clark: Throwback basketball player with short shorts in 2000. We had a party out in Denver.

Roach: I was Spider-Man one time when I was younger, probably 8 or 9.

Kane: When I was a little kid I was Humpty Dumpty so that would be right up there.

Mesa, Ariz., residents might vote on a Cubs Spring Training plan next year. Surprisingly, they are not voting to send them away.

'Hood hangs

Three low-key bars vie for your attention

By Lisa Arnett and Matt McGuire

As much as we're all watching our wallets these days, we're still going out. So though there aren't many multi-million dollar nightclubs coming down the pike, neighborhood joints are still going strong. Three new 'hood hangs have opened their doors in Wicker Park, Irving Park and the West Loop, complete with menus boasting fun, feel-good staples—including, of course, the obligatory sliders. Do they stand a chance to become your new go-to? Here's the rundown.

Pitchfork Food & Saloon

2922 W. Irving Park Rd. 773-866-2010

Vibe: The "saloon" part of the name isn't just a cutesy add-on; it's what this week-old spot is going for. Everything from the driftwood coat rack to the extensive whiskey list has a Southwest vibe that's more polished than rough 'n' tumble. The owners also run Cordis Brothers Supper Club in Lakeview, which means plenty of delicious Cordis Brothers barbecue options grace the menu.

Fan base: Thankful Irving Park/Albany Park denizens. The area has its share of comfy dives, but it's low (real low) on pubs with a decent menu.

Accessibility: One mile south of the Francisco Brown Line stop. If you're driving, there's plenty of street parking.

Best daily deal: Half-price bourbon drinks and $5 pulled-pork sandwiches (with a side) on Tuesdays

Slider spin: Four to an order ($8). Mix and match from barbecue pulled pork, beef brisket and cheeseburger options.

Bonus: Tons and tons of dependable Southwest-inspired menu options ... and edamame? Yes, edamame.

NEW
SCENE
BARS

6 Corners Sports Bar
JASON LITTLE FOR METROMIX

6 Corners Sports Bar

1950 W. North Ave. 773-235-5700

Vibe: The look of this inoffensive green-painted and wood-trimmed bar is about as creative as the name. A mammoth projector behind the bar and 13 flat screens plus loud-and-clear sound add up to optimal game-watching conditions. Fried fare goes a bit beyond the basics with a dozen funky dips such as cilantro ranch dressing and wasabi-ginger sauce.

Fan base: Wicker Park and Bucktown sports fans who usually watch the game at Piece but aren't in the mood for pizza.

Accessibility: Right off the Damen Blue Line stop

Best daily deal: $8 Miller Lite pitchers and $10 for a dozen jumbo wings on weekends and Mondays

Slider spin: 8 kinds ($6.95-$8.95 for three). Fried chicken or pulled pork sliders? Appetizing. Tilapia slider? Not so much. Points for mini-pretzel buns.

Bonus: Three words: Mini. Funnel. Cakes. Prepare to leave happy (and coated in powdered sugar).

New Line Tavern

201 N. Clinton St. 312-212-5463

Vibe: A cozy, clean-cut and contemporary mix of new meets old, with freshly upholstered booths tucked into the vintage architecture of the former Chicago & North Western Railway Powerhouse building.

Fan base: West Loop condo-owning couples going out for burgers instead of ordering takeout, commuters who missed the Metra at nearby Ogilvie.

Accessibility: Right off the Clinton Green and Pink Line stop

Best daily deal: None on the docket yet, but generous specialty drinks such as the Orange Bourbon Press (bourbon, Grand Marnier and ginger ale muddled with orange) are a reasonable $6 every day.

Slider spin: The classic patty with caramelized onions is tasty, but the remoulade-slathered crabcake sliders are the standout ($6.95-$7.95 for three).

Bonus: Upgrading the standard skinny fries to the garlic butter-laden, asiago-dusted New Line fries is so worth the 75-cent upcharge.

JASON LITTLE FOR METROMIX

Italian unleashed

By M. Kathleen Pratt

Fame da Lupo translates roughly to "hungry like the wolf," but Lubo Yordanov didn't swipe the name of his new restaurant from Duran Duran. The Italian phrase fits his desire to satisfy the famished, he says—and it's a lot sexier than the American equivalent, "I could eat a horse."

2 for $20

Fame da Lupo

1463-65 W. Leland Ave.
773-334-9800

The menu at the Uptown BYOB, which Yordanov opened about three weeks ago with his wife, Kesinee Tang, and partner Vladi Veney, leans Italian, but it is accented with touches from Yordanov's native Bulgaria. There are salads, pastas and some fairly standard appetizers (bruschetta, garlic bread, fried zucchini, etc.) on the menu, but you'll want to skip over those. Pizzas aren't really the draw here either, though the kitchen turns out reasonably priced ($9-$20.50) thin-crust and hand-tossed versions with toppings ranging from standards such as tomato-basil to more creative combos like potato-dill-garlic and bacon-onion-fried egg.

The real values are on the sandwich menu, an easily overlooked lineup just five strong, all served on thick slices of French bread from Artemio's Bakery. Yordanov's specialty is a meatball sandwich ($5.50) made with melted mozzarella, lutenitza (a Bulgarian tomato- and sweet red pepper-based sauce) and two pork meatballs. Yes, just two. But before you think you're getting ripped off, consider these meatballs: They're as big as hockey pucks and flattened to fit the sandwich—more patties than balls, really. They're also unusually juicy. Yordanov first grills then pan fries them, which adds some texture to the outside and locks in flavor from onion, cumin and tsibritsa, a Bulgarian herbal seasoning.

Nearly as filling is the signature Fame da Lupo sandwich ($6), spread with lutenitza and piled with hunks of feta and thinly sliced lukanka, a pungent dry salami spiced with cumin and fenugreek. Less adventurous options include a veggie and cheese sandwich ($5.75) and a simple ham, egg and cheese ($5.25) version.

Though there's a candle flickering on every table in the 40-seat orange- and green-walled dining room, Fame da Lupo comes up a bit short on ambiance. Personable, chatty service and the BYOB policy make up for it, but carryout and delivery are good options too.

DJ Drew Fields, known as Drubix-Cube on the DJ scene, test drives the newly released 'DJ Hero' video game. BRIAN J. MOROWCZYNSKI FOR REDEYE

'Hero' test

By Ryan Smith
FOR REDEYE

It could be called "Replicate the Mashup Hero," or "Hit Buttons On a Turntable Hero." But "DJ Hero" Nah.

That's according to Drew Fields, better known in Chicago nightclubs as DJ Drubix-Cube. Fields, 31, of Logan's Square, sat down with RedEye and a copy of Activision's brand new addition to the "Hero" family—a video game that promises to do to the turntable what "Guitar Hero" did to rock instruments.

Fields' verdict after an hour of mixing it up to some of the game's 93 mashups? The game is to real DJing what "Wii Tennis" is to playing against Roger Federer at Wimbledon.

"For people who want to pretend like they're doing the real thing, it does take elements of the DJ experience, but it doesn't recreate it at all," Fields said. "It's definitely a fun game, but it's not really comparable to real DJing."

Fields speaks from his extensive experience with both spinning and playing video games. He's spun in Chicago for more than three years at such clubs as Enclave, Crescendo and Reserve, and has worked frequently with nationally-known DJs like Crooklyn Clan, DiscoTech and DJ AM, the late mixmaster whose remixes appear in several "DJ Hero" tracks. Fields is also a game junkie and fan of the "Guitar Hero" and "Rock Band" series, so he said he was excited to see what Activision would do with mixing decks made of plastic.

The look of the turntable replica, as it turns out, might be the most similar to the real thing, he said.

"Well, there should be two of these [turntables] here instead of one, but this thing is pretty cool," Fields said as he set the device in his lap.

The game play of "DJ Hero" breaks down the crowd-pleasing, beat-matching, cross-fading art of the DJ into a hand-eye coordination game of slamming buttons and sliding knobs.

"I just want to go kind of nuts with the scratching on this track," Fields said as he played a mash-up of Queen's "Another One Bites the Dust" and Daft Punk's "Da Funk" on the medium difficulty level. "I'm not used to being told what to do with a turntable."

The lack of beat-matching capabilities in "DJ Hero" is the game's most egregious sin, Fields said. When a DJ beat-matches, he alters the tempo of one track to match that of another track so the dancing crowd hears a single mix of the two songs that flow together properly.

"It's my favorite part of DJing because it's fun and it can bring enjoyment from the crowd to the next level," Fields said. "But in this game, beat-matching is completely done for you."

The game's special rewind function that lets you spin your record backward and replay the last five seconds of the song? A total faux-pas if done at a late-night Chicago dance party.

"Some DJs use the rewind as a transition into another song," he said. "But to do it in the middle of the song and to interrupt people's dancing? No way."

Despite his disappointment in the game, Fields has hope for the inevitable "DJ Hero 2."

"If they can somehow incorporate more beat-matching and make it so that you can make your own mixes instead of listening to pre-made ones, it would be more fun and more like what we actually do." RYAN SMITH IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR

REVIEW

'DJ Hero'

$119 for XB360/
PS2/PS3/Wii

"DJ Hero" isn't going to turn you into Fatboy Slim any time soon, but that doesn't mean it isn't an entertaining game for novice mixmasters.

It's basically "Guitar Hero" with a turntable. Chugging riffs, solos, whammy bars and classic and modern rock have been replaced with scratching, cross-fading and plastic knobs, dials and mash-ups of hip-hop, R&B and techno songs. You still hit colored buttons in rhythm with the music and score more points for hitting as many as you can in a row.

The soundtrack's novel blend of songs mashed up by real DJs such as Grandmaster Flash, DJ AM and DJ Jazzy Jeff help "DJ Hero" make you think you're actually in control of mashing up the songs, even if all you're doing is following onscreen prompts.

Sorry, you might have to make room in your apartment for one more fake plastic instrument.

Things that turn us on

TV*'The League'

9:30 p.m. Thursday, FX

One question popped into my head after watching FX's raunchy new comedy about the arrested-development members of a fantasy football league: Do straight guys really make so many homo-suggestive comments in a day? Not that there's anything wrong with that, but really guys, just try gay sex if you are so curious. Anyway, "The League" is funny and fits perfectly as a companion to "It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia" (9 p.m.), which follows another group of ethically and emotionally stunted friends. Like that show, "The League" isn't for everyone. It definitely will upset some viewers, like those who don't want to hear about adventurous sex, smoking pot (or other things) and developmentally-challenged dogs. These boys—and the women who put up with them—taunt one another with scathing, hilarious attacks. CURT WAGNER, REDEYE

GAME*'Ratchet & Clank Future: A Crack in Time'

$59.99 for PS3

Insomniac Games' best release yet follows the lombax Ratchet scouring the galaxy for signs of robot Clank, who has been abducted by the Zoni. The main attraction is an assortment of mind-bending time puzzles, in which Clank has to record multiple versions of himself and coordinate them all in order to move onto the next room. The tight gameplay, superb production and irresistible humor should make everyone a Ratchet & Clank fan. LOU KESTEN, AP

You've stayed active through menopause.
Will you be sidelined by its symptoms?

We are conducting a clinical research study to test the safety and efficacy of an investigational drug in preventing postmenopausal osteoporosis and treating menopausal symptoms while ensuring endometrial (uterine lining) safety. You may be able to participate if you:

- Are currently 40 to 64 years old
- Are menopausal and experiencing menopausal symptoms
- Have not had a hysterectomy
- Have not used oral hormonal treatments such as estrogen, progestin, androgen-, or SERM-containing products within the past 2 months

Study participation lasts for approximately 14 -1/2 months. Participants can expect up to 8 visits to the study doctor. Qualified participants may receive study-related office visits, medical evaluations, mammograms, gynecological exams, bone density scans if eligible and the study drug at no cost. Danny Pudi (right) sports a Batman costume on "Community"—while Chevy Chase flexes his comedic muscles. NBC PHOTOS

7:30 p.m. Thursday, NBC

Leslie (Amy Poehler) hunts down a vandal who defaces the statue of a city founder while Ann (Rashida Jones) throws a lame Halloween party.

Pudi having a ball on 'Community'

Danny Pudi has a lot in common with his character, Abed, on NBC's "Community."

They're both biracial. They both like making new friends. They love pop culture from the 1980s.

And it turns out they both do dead-on, hilarious impersonations of Christian Bale as Batman.

In the comedy's Halloween episode Thursday, Pudi's socially awkward Abed tones down his frenetic persona to be the Dark Knight at the Day of the Dead party his classmate, Annie (Alison Brie), is throwing for their Spanish class.

You won't see a lot of Chicago native Pudi in this episode. (But when you do, you'll laugh.) It's mostly a showcase for his more famous co-star, that guy named Chevy Chase, whose non-traditional student Pierce, with the aid of illegal drugs and a Beastmaster costume, comes to terms with being old. It's a marvelous episode filled with sharp social commentary and great physical comedy from Chase.

For Pudi, who grew up in both Brighton Park and Jefferson Park, studied at Second City and made some comedy inroads with the Asian-American troupe Stir-Friday Night, working with Chase is an unbelievable experience.

"It's a lot like school to me, you know?" he said. "Because I feel like I'm getting an education on the different comedy styles every day, and it's kind of a blessing."

Pudi described an experience from early in the season, when Chase threw a tomato at Pudi and hit him square in the crotch.

"I look up and I see Chevy Chase giggling," Pudi said. "And I'm like, can it get any better than this? I don't think it can. No. I'm having the time of my life. ... If this all ends tomorrow, I've learned a lot; I've had a ball."

Despite the show's less-than-stellar ratings, Pudi's play time won't be ending too soon. Last week, NBC picked up the series for a full season, which means nine more episodes will be filmed to go with the original 13-episode order.

Lost your wallet? You still can fly

Tribune Newspapers

Nothing puts a damper on a vacation like realizing your wallet is missing.

Lost or stolen money and credit cards is bad enough. Without identification, though, you have to wonder what adventures await you at the airport as you try to catch your flight home. Actually, it might not be as bad as you fear.

If you have lost your identification, you will be required to provide the document-checking officer with something to help in confirming your ID.

A letter with the address on it would work, or a copy of a police report if the wallet was stolen, says Lara Uselding, a Transportation Security Administration spokeswoman.

"Anything this person might have to help identify themselves would be very helpful," she said.

Additionally, according to the TSA Web site, a passenger "may be subjected to additional screening protocols, including enhanced physical screening, enhanced carry-on and/or checked baggage screening, interviews with behavior-detection or law-enforcement officers and other measures."

"Passengers whose identity cannot be verified by TSA may not be allowed to go through the checkpoint or onto an airplane," Uselding pointed out.

Another course of action is to check with your airline.

One way to avoid potential hassles is to carry backup identification—that letter she mentioned, your passport, a Xerox of your driver's license or government-issued ID. (For international travel, make copies of your passport.) Then keep this backup material—along with a list of emergency numbers, such as whom to call to report lost or stolen credit cards—in a separate location in your luggage.

The TSA list of accepted backup identification is at tsa.gov/travelers/airtravel/acceptable\_documents.shtml.

WEB WATCH

Travel news fills 27Clouds

Eugen Beer hand-picks timely, travel-related news articles from a variety of well-respected media sources and highlights them on one page at the Web site 27clouds.com.

What's hot: The front page of 27Clouds engages readers with travel news headlines, corresponding photos and links to travel news articles from big media players, such as NPR, the Economist, Financial Times, Guardian, Wall Street Journal, New York Times, Sydney Morning Herald and more. The "Load Factor" held attention mostly with airline industry news leads. I also liked clicking through to the Top 10 lists. This is a sister site to ColdMud (food-related) and Its Animals (animal stories and videos from around the world).

What's not: The subsections of the site are confusing. We couldn't tell the difference between Boarding Pass and Hub, and we found no explanation in the About Us section either.

It would be easier on the reader if inspirational destination features were clearly defined in one area, with pet travel or tech tips in a separate area.

Taking the “BOO!” out of dentistry.

Halloween should be scary, going to the dentist shouldn't be. That's why at Chicago Smile Design we work with our patients to find out the best way to help them relax through their dental appointments. For some it's as simple as taking a little pill so all of their dental needs can be taken care of in one appointment. So stop by and say "Use your tricks to make my dental appointment a treat" * No costume necessary.

COVER BOY

No really, wow.

That's about all we have to say after seeing the awesomely bad (or maybe just bad?) cover art for Adam Lambert's much-ballyhooed debut album, "For Your Entertainment," out Nov. 17.

For one, the bizarre cover actually looks more appropriate for an actual 1970s-era record album than it does for a CD coming out in nearly 2010. But Glambert says that's all part of his plan.

"Thank you to those who appreciate and understand that the album cover is deliberately campy," tweeted the "American Idol" runner up. "It's an omage [sic] to the past. It IS ridiculous."

"For those that don't get it: oh well ... Glad to have gotten your attention. Androgyny. Rock n roll."

Clearly there's a lot to discuss here. Let's take a look at where exactly Lambert might be taking his cues from.

Seth Rogen won't be celebrating Halloween, and that's fine with him. "I have a girlfriend now and I've entered the unfortunate world of paired costuming," he told reporters last week. "It's not fun. I don't recommend it. I always end up being the lamer half. It's like she's a dog and I'm a fire hydrant or something like that. It's never fun." Well, it is sometimes fun, he admitted, adding that he and the girlfriend once dressed as Doc and Marty from "Back to the Future." "That was one of my favorites," he said, adding that he'll be too busy working on "The Green Hornet" to dress up this year. "Maybe I'm dodging a bullet."

Seriously?

Brace yourself. There's a new Jon Gosselin rumor from In Touch Weekly: He's working on a show with Nadya "Octomom" Suleman. Reps for both reality TV stars denied the rumor, which—by the way—seemed extremely suspect anyway, but it was too good not to share.

Jay-Z tries again

No, you didn't miss Jay-Z and Alicia Keys performing "Empire State of Mind" before Game 1 of the World Series. The stars' duet was moved to Thursday because of rain, The Associated Press reports, because "staging for the performance could adversely impact the field if it is wet."

Game on!

Get ready, nature lovers. Discovery Communications and game publisher Crave are partnering to release video game versions of "Deadliest Catch," out in the spring, and "Man vs. Wild," coming in 2011, according to The Hollywood Reporter. No word yet on whether either comes with a grizzled beard.

THE DIGIT

$2.2 million

The amount "This Is It" made in late Tuesday night screenings in North America following its L.A. premiere, The Associated Press reports.
